

Editorial

Today I was helping one of my nursing students who was researching Partnerships in Care; nurses working with other medical and health professionals. As this is becoming increasingly common and the professional duties carried out by a nurse, physiotherapist, occupational therapist, dietician etc. are becoming increasingly blurred, Libraries for Nursing has expanded its remit to cover not only nursing and midwifery, but also the Allied Health Professions. We therefore hope to cover information previously covered by the now disbanded CILIP subgroup INFAH (Information for Allied Health). This Special Issue of the Bulletin therefore contains articles of interest to libraries and information professionals within the area of Allied Health. We would like to say a special thanks to INFAH for providing the funding to publish this special issue and we look forward to continuing to publish articles in the area of nursing, midwifery and allied health.
